

AUTO ROBBERS WERE VERY POOR SEARCHERS

Found $125 and Jewels of Victims They Held Up and Got Only $3.

Two mounted highwaymen who tied to an auto held up two men and a woman early yesterday at Jersey City. They got $125 and a small jewelry box, but the robbers, after searching the victims for a long time, found only $3 in the car. While they were searching the car, the woman hid her jewelry. Joseph Hicks of No. 199 Hancock street, Jersey City, stopped on the Hudson Terrace to make some slight repairs to his car. With him on the road was Edward Baker of No. 59 West Street, Jersey City. In the car were two women.

A passing auto stopped. Three men, their faces masked, jumped out, revolvers in hand, and demanded money of the victims. One stood by to help the victims, while the two others searched. Baker and Hicks say they were very poor searchers. After the thieves drove away the men were informed, but found no one of the highwaymen.

exercised lung cells, which they were not aware existed, has been discovered. These lung cells have become slightly stuck together and fallen upon each other, because they have not been used since youthful outdoor games had been indulged in and have remained closed almost through life.

Extra physical exertion makes them open to receive the fresh air which you are forcing into them, and the extra effort to breathe causes a slight pain.

When the pain is good and sharp you can make sure you are burning up a mass of stored-up waste matter and also giving new life to the important internal organs.

Those who suffer from heart trouble should avoid strenuous exercises.

Letters From Readers.

SOFT, SPONGY SKIN—MAY T. writes: "My skin is soft and almost spongy to touch. What causes this and what will remedy it? I am five feet two and weigh 115 pounds. Is this too much?"

You need a course of vigorous physical exercises to harden the flesh, for a spongy condition shows lowered vitality and poor quality muscle flesh. Your weight is about right.

CRACKERS AND MILK—O. B. writes: "I work in an office and leave home in the morning on a substantial breakfast. I am obliged to take lunch in a restaurant and at noon have noticed many persons, both business men and women, eating a bowl of crackers and milk and a simple dessert. I have never tried this dish, but always have a meat luncheon. As I am not a heavy eater and do not really want the lunch, I wish to know if this simple luncheon of crackers and milk would be nourishing enough for me? I am not trying to reduce or gain weight."

You are not eating for luncheon, especially so when you eat a substantial breakfast and dinner, as you say you do. It is wrong to eat crackers and milk and a dessert. Crackers and milk make a very substantial luncheon and one of the best ones for gaining weight. Rice and milk also makes a good developing luncheon. Office workers need no luncheon at all, except perhaps a glass of milk or buttermilk, or fruit, especially in hot weather.

TO INCREASE SIZE OF ANKLE—MADGE R. asks: "Could you tell me a way to increase size of dreadfully thin ankle and calf of leg?"

Heel and toe raising exercises fifty times each day will develop the leg muscles. You can get bicycle practice on a stationary bicycle machine in most any gymnasium. This will also help you considerably.

ABOUT SOAP—S. A. R. writes: "Please tell me what soap to use on tender skin and how often should it be used. Shall I use hot or cold water?"

Use pure castile soap, if any. Do not use hot water on tender, dry skin. It would be better for you to cleanse the skin with a pure, thin cleansing cream and omit the use of soap altogether until the skin becomes less sensitive.

TO DARKEN EYEBROWS—ETH. writes: "My eyebrows are brick red, while the hair on my head is black, and I would be glad to know of something which will darken them. I also want to know how to make them thicker. They are very thick and meet between the eyes, yet are scant at the parts where they should be thick. How can I thin them between the eyes and thicken them on top? Until page ten?"

It is made? Can alum solution be used to reduce the bush, and may it be used without first applying hot wet towels? I am not in position to use the hot water treatment.

Use an eye pencil on the brows to darken them. Dyes will be most unsatisfactory for this purpose. Sage tea would not answer at all, as it rubs off the hair. Have the thick part of the brows removed by the electric needle. It is the only way. Brush the top of the brows with a narrow brush dipped in vasoline. Alum solution may help slightly to reduce the bush, as it is an astringent. Strenuous arm exercises are better for this purpose and bag punching one of the very best.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR—GRACE M. writes: "Will a mixture of peroxide and ammonia remove superfluous hair permanently?"

No; nothing will remove it permanently but the electric needle.

MADEIRA MORGAN COLUMBIA THEATRE

THE NEW PLAYS

"The Man Who Came Back"
Melodrama of Lurid Hue.

BY CHARLES DARNTON

JUST what he meant by it wasn't exactly clear, but in introducing somebody whose name evidently didn't matter, Manager W. A. Brady, at the Playhouse on Saturday night, said he wished to introduce youth to the stage.

Very well! It is youth that this silly old world worships. In youth there is promise—also wild oats from time to time.

Then, too, nothing is dearer to the box office than a play in which the irresponsible young have their merry fling. Even Ben Hur has saluted adolescence with a flick of his gray forelock. But what has the theatre to gain by showing the vicious side of youth?

Without apologies to Hogarth, "The Man Who Came Back" suggests a modern man's progress from the home of a New York millionaire to a Chinese "opium joint" in Shanghai. So far as originality is concerned, Jules Eckert Goodman took his idea for the play from a story by John Fleming Wilson. It takes a playwright to catch an author! The ordinary playwright, judging by his work, is a devoted reader of current action. But that's his business—not mine.

To me "The Man Who Came Back" recalled those glowing days when Bowery melodrama of lurid hue held the torch up to nature. In this case the son of a millionaire went to San Francisco after a gay life in New York and a purely incidental marriage in New Jersey, and so he found himself on the Pacific slope with an adulteress leaning toward a cabaret singer dressed in pure white. Need I tell you that she refused to go back to New York with him on the terms he mentioned? No, she was ready to follow him elsewhere and meet him on a common level. Accordingly, Marcelle, the beautiful cabaret singer, was on hand to greet the millionaire's son after he had been abandoned to Shanghai. And so they met in the opium joint sacred to melodrama. Here they pulled up, and later we saw them on a pineapple plantation in Honolulu. Soberly married, they made the best of things until the good old fairy aunt appeared and told Henry that he could go right back home and find millions awaiting him if he went alone. Then it was that Marcelle, who had overheard the conversation, decided to sacrifice herself for the sake of the poor boy who had only to find millions awaiting him if he went alone. Then it was that Marcelle, who had overheard the conversation, decided to sacrifice herself for the sake of the poor boy who had only to find millions awaiting him if he went alone.

Necessarily, the acting in a play of this kind is a matter of form. Henry Hull easily achieved the task of realizing the splendidly weakling, Marg Nash played Marcelle with the same intelligent sense of character she has displayed in other roles at the Playhouse. But the painful fact remains that, artistically, she took a step backward as the girl who became mentioned in the play. Another member of the Gram George Company, Ernest Lamford, cheapened himself as a detective, in spite of the fact that he was amusing. As the father, Edward Emery did the best acting of the night.

But "The Man Who Came Back" couldn't possibly bring glory to any one.

Motion Picture Notes

Director Frank Crane is in the Adirondacks on his first vacation in three years.

"Civilization" will move from the Criterion Theatre to the Park, Sunday, Sept. 10.

Raymond McKee, the boy in the Metro-Rose picture, "The Wheel of Justice," can play the ukulele. Outside of that he's all right, however.

Pauline Frederick has completed her first "twin sister" role. It is in the Famous Players' picture, "Ashes of Embers."

Mary Pickford's first film, to be made by her own producing company, will be "Less Than the Dust," written by Hector Turnbull. It will be an entire evening's entertainment.

E. K. Lincoln, who will have the chief role in the "Jimmie Dale" series, owns an estate of 1,000 acres near Haverford, Mass. He acts in films for the fun of it as much as anything else.

The Reith Company made most of a comedy film on a street car recently. It was the most unique studio on record. Paths will release the picture.

Lionel Barrymore has begun work on a new picture for the Metro called "The Brand of Cowardice." John W. Noble will direct with the assistance of Fred Sittenham.

Ben H. Grimm, publicity representative for the Metro, has returned from Hollywood, Cal.

Victor L. Schertzinger, composer of the score of "Civilization," has gone to California, accompanied by Mrs. Schertzinger, to begin work on the next Thomas H. Ince production.

Mabel Taliaferro went to Portland.

Among following the management in Seattle recently the Oliver Morison Photography Company announced that L. V. Jefferson has been made associate general manager and that Kathleen Kirkham and Louise Clark, actresses, have been engaged.

Several weeks ago Hugh Ford up-braided a Famous Players stage manager because he put a mixed lot of furniture in a set and supposed to represent the home of a cultured man. "The furniture must harmonize," said Mr. Ford. "This man is a bookworm." Yesterday Mr. Ford asked the carpenter to make a model table for his office. "It will take a week," replied the carpenter. "Why?" demanded Mr. Ford. "Because," replied the carpenter, "it will take that long to find the right wood to match the mahogany in your desk."
